EUropean and US Africa Policy – A Comparative Analysis

Comment:
Contemporary Africa shows a divergent and highly complex picture. On the one hand, negative news from armed conflict and undemocratic regimes as well as current crises such as the Ebola-pandemic in West Africa, the terror of Boko Haram in Nigeria or piracy in somalin waters are predominate in western discourse. On the other hand, Africa has seen dramatic improvements in economic growth rates, democracy, peace-building and regional cooperation over the past decade. In the last 10 or 15 years Africa has become a new and strengthened focus of both US and European foreign policy. Africa is now relevant and that not only in terms of security threats, potential economic cooperation and access to various resources but also because of emerging powers such as South Africa or recent major political changes like the ‘Arab spring’ or the new state South Sudan. From a strategic point of view, some scholars see at least a competition between China and the West over resources and influence in Africa.

The seminar focuses on US and European (by the EU and partial by EU member states) foreign policy towards Africa and discusses various foreign policy concepts (such as soft power), strategies and problems (e.g. coherence) by studying and comparing different policy fields (e.g. defense, economic, ecologic, development policy). To do so, the policy analysis and the method of structured focused comparison will be used.

Students learn different foreign policy strategies and the problems of their implementation, could compare US and EU approaches to Africa and are able to reflect challenges for national and international actors critically. Other learning goals are the accurate presentation of scientific objects as well as a cooperative and communicative learning within the seminar.

Overview Literature:

Contact information, consultation hour:
0761-203-67773; ingo.henneberg@politik.uni-freiburg.de;
Consultation hour: Mondays, 4-5 pm